Building Health: Planning and designing for health and happiness

University of the West of England, Bristol

Today there is growing recognition of the impact that the built environment has on public health. Planning and design can play a pivotal role in tackling today's urgent challenges such as sedentary lifestyles, obesity and health inequality. Housing growth and regeneration provide opportunities to 'build in' health from the start and to improve existing environments. Building Health brings together professionals, academics and policy-makers to share inspirational stories of success and identify how we can work together more effectively. The conference is organised by The Architecture Centre in partnership with the Department of Health, Government Office for the South West and the WHO Collaborating Centre for Healthy Cities and Urban Policy at the University of the West of England. The event is hosted by the Institute for Sustainability, Health and Environment at UWE. Click the link below to book a place online

How to Listen So Children Will Talk

Eastpoint Centre, Burgoyne Rd, Southampton SO19 6PB

This Training Seminar will explore issues relating to how children try to communicate with those around them that things are not OK. How to listen so children will talk! Children and Young People try to tell or communicate in many ways, many of them not including speech. Adults need to be able to be with a child in a way that enables the child or young person to feel comfortable and heard on many levels. It should not be the child or young person's fault if the adult fails in this and the child or young person is not able to tell or to be heard. It will include information about how children and young people tell, what stops children and young people from telling, neurobiology, blame, shame, 'telling' behaviours and attachment. This will include how to listen when a child or young person has no speech. For further information, please contact CIS'ters Training Office Tel: 023 80 338080 Email:

Domestic violence approaches in rural and semi-rural areas

Nottingham

Domestic violence is a major issue in rural areas, but in some ways is harder to tackle than in cities. Communities are smaller and more isolated, and long distances make the provision of accessible services a challenge. There remains also a belief in some quarters that bad things happen in cities, but not in the countryside. However, domestic violence – much of it sparked by alcohol and drug misuse – is equally prevalent in rural areas. This event will provide an opportunity to consider examples of strategies and services which have been specifically shaped to work within the dynamic of rural and semi-rural communities.

2010 and Beyond: Re-thinking Mental Health Policy in the UK

Central London

If current trends continue, depression will be the second leading cause of disability in the world by 2020. As the Government's ten-year strategy for mental health, the National Service Framework for mental health, launched in 1999, comes to an end, 2009 marks a critically important year for our – the UK population generally and employers specifically – understanding of mental wellbeing and the provision and service design of, as well as access to social and health care services. One in six adults in the UK - irrespective of gender, age, nationality, cultural heritage, profession or religious grouping - has mild to moderate and severe mental health conditions such as depression, phobic anxiety, obsessive compulsive or personality disorders. These numbers suggest that issues related to mental health or mental well-being affect every family and business in the UK. The Sainsbury Centre for Mental Health (SCMH) states that a third of sickness absences from work can be accounted for by mental health problems. Furthermore, the SCMH reported that the cost to the UK economy of people being out of work with mental health problems is approximately £10bn (October 2007). According to a recent report by the King's Fund, over the next 20 years the combined cost of lost productivity due to mental health problems and the direct cost of health and social care will double in real terms. This very timely forum will allow delegates to discuss, amongst other issues, the social, housing, employment and healthcare needs of people with mental health conditions, their families and their employers.

The Ageing Population Conference 2010

QEII Conference Centre, London

This year the government launched 'Building a Society for all Ages' which outlined a series of proposals to help Britain prepare for an enormous demographic change which sees people living longer than ever before. The Ageing Population Conference 2010 will explore these new government initiatives and discuss best practice and key policies to be undertaken by public, private and third sectors which are designed to ensure that older people live longer, healthier and more active lives. It is essential that we act now to address the challenges presented by this shift in society and build a culture where people are not defined by their age, and prejudice does not prevent us from fully harnessing the skills and experience of our older population. The government has also recently published a Green Paper, Shaping the Future of Care Together, which spells out the options for reform, how a new system could be organised and most importantly, how it will be funded. More and more people have care and support needs, which highlight the need for a fair and affordable system.

Early booking is recommended as demand for places is expected to be high. To register your interest in attending please contact Amy Green on 0161 211 3028 or email amy.green@govnet.co.uk
